Speaker of the month:

María José Zeledón Pérez

María José Zeledón Pérez is part-time faculty in the Communication Studies Department at San Diego Mesa College and a consultant for their Committee for Diversity, Action, Inclusion and Equity.

Born and raised in Costa Rica, she received her Bachelor's degree there in Business Administration with a minor in Marketing. After working in mass media for years, she came to the United States as an international student at San Diego State University for graduate school, where she received a Master of Arts in Communication.

Currently a second year doctoral student at SDSU in the education program with a concentration in Community College Leadership, her research focuses on educational attainment for underrepresented students of color in science, technology, engineering and mathematics attending two-year Hispanic Serving Institutions.

María-José's favorite part of being an educator is to be able to connect with students in order to help them achieve their academic and personal goals. She is proud of her Latina heritage and believes that embracing diversity in her classroom is the key to student success. She is also passionate about advocating for equity and inclusion in higher education.

Connect with Mesa Latinx faculty, staff and managers in a unique way!
